will always keep both feet on the ground, approaching the solution to difficult problems with the same sincerity of purpose that has always been a part of him." And, you get the idea that this is the same appraisal these folks would have made of him back in the 1900's.

Over in Independence, where he has maintained residence since 1919, they know that "Harry" wants to come back and make the old Wallace home, where he has lived since his marriage, the Summer White House—he has so stated in conversations with his friends. They confidently expect him, as one of his first acts upon returning, to stroll down to the courthouse square—the same courthouse where he sat as county judge, stopping for friendly, informal chats with those old friends and neighbors who happen to be out at his customary early hour—so will, too, if the Secret Service permits.

Kansas Citians will lay you a bet that shortly after his arrival in their city he'll be seated in the barber chair of Frank Spino, an old Battery D man with whom the President served in the first World War. These folks know too, that the Presidency won't change Harry Truman. A close
